

The gods messenger by

One day there was a boy named Pancreidus who lived on an island with no animals only humans and his mother refused to tell him who his father was. Because of this everyone was lacking protein and was rather weak so they had to eat a lot of vegetables and fruits. Their harvest was never plentiful Pancreidus hated eating vegetables and fruits and wanted something more and wanted to be the strongest person on the island.

One day he was exploring the island and he came across a small entry into a cave near the beach that seemed decorated " But I have heard of no cave on the island." He thought about it and decided to enter. He had to break a bit of the entrance to enter the cave when he got further in to the cave it opened into a gigantic temple there was shrines for every god he could even think of except Posiodon.

He ran back to his village with as much speed as he could and told his mother of his find. His mother was furious that he had entered a cave near the beach because the tide could have risen and he could have drowned. He told everyone in the village and everyone followed him to where he had found it the next day and the entrance was gone. All of the villagers were angry at Pancreidus for wasting their time confused Pancreidus returned to town and waited until the next day.

He returned to the same spot the next day and the cave was open again almost inviting him to go in. "well if the villagers wont believe me ill just keep the cave to myself" he told himself. Pancreidus went back to town and started stealing riches and vegetables and started praying to all of the gods and asking for help leaving the island and getting stronger and bringing fortune to him.

The gods had heard his calls and were thinking of what to do with their powers to help him. They concluded that this forsaken villages people would not accept the gods but this young man would have to represent his whole village.

So the next day Pancreidus went to the cave again and was surprised that Hermes had come to give him the message that he was to be the lone person to represent his small island to present the state of the island for the gods. Hermes also told him that his father and mother were once great worshipers of the gods. But when non-believers came to their homeland and killed his father. His mother and the township were forced to go into hiding to an island that was empty because they had sacrificed all of the wildlife. Once they arrived they banned the worship of the gods thinking that they brought then bad fortune and lead to the destruction of their hometown.

Pancreidus agreed to their terms and understood what he had to do. The next day he started building a boat and started working for food and supplies to meet his needs on the journey ahead. He had to do tasks such as moving wheelbarrows to herding nearly all of the village's sheep before he could get his desired amount of supplies.

A few months later he had the supplies for his trip to bring the animals back to the island and to bring a good harvest. He prayed to all of the gods and went to the beach and started praying for Posiodon to speak to him. It took a few hours but a messenger of Poseidon came and requested that he go with him. He was taken to Poseidon and spoke with him. Poseidon said that he was not in the islands alter because he had taunted the village and the island with tidal waves and had killed many people and he was not wanted on the island for that and requested that he ask people for forgiveness. He agreed and Poseidon set him off on his journey.

His first place to spread the word of the gods was in Persia the home of the people who had destroyed his parent's village and killed his father. Most of the army was out conquering the rest of the land so he was rather safe. When he started preaching the word of the gods he had drawn a large crowd rather quickly and many people were listening others were gawking. But there were no guards in the area so people started complaining to the high priest of Persia and he soon came to the area and started trying to disprove his teachings. Zues was watching this predicament and hurled a mighty lighting bolt at the priest. The whole crowd bowed in awe of the gods work.

Word soon spread throughout the Persian Empire and many converted to the teachings of the gods and Pancreidus became a well-known powerful preacher. He also started asking for his home island to be supplied with resources. Of course people wouldn't just give them resources so he traveled to Rome to reassure people that the gods notice them and asked the emperor for help for his island. He agreed to help his island and keep it noticed. But Pancredius would have to become a sacrifice. He was sacrificed in a ceremony and when he arrived in Tartarus he was told to speak with the council of the gods. They decided to empower him and make him the watcher of pilgrims and preachers and grant them safety in travels. His island became a popular place of worship over the next few years and his island prospered.
